An exploratory survey of the Akhmatovo crater in the Altai region of Russia has revealed the shape of an ancient meteorite crater with an estimated diameter of 100-200 km, the Main Mineralogical and Geochemical Research Institute of the Russian Academy of Sciences (MIRI), which is taking part in the research, said on Wednesday. "An impact event of an estimated diameter up to 200 km occurred in the past and left a large, almost circular crater on the surface of the ground. This fact was confirmed during the basic exploration of the Akhmatovo crater," the institute said in a statement. A research team from MIRI started the research at the Akhmatovo crater site in November 2013 to determine the reason behind its formation. They deployed a network of surveying stations, including a helicopter that collected data about the lithography and morphology of the terrain. They found out that the radius of the crater is more than 100 km and that its floor is at an altitude of 1,350 meters above sea level. "The periphery of the crater is covered with limestone, whereas its center is occupied by granite," the institute said. The Akhmatovo crater of immense size is located in the territory of the North-Eastern Administrative Okrug of the Republic of Altai. It is situated 24 kilometers from the border with Mongolia and 58 kilometers from the border with Kazakhstan. The first scientists to explore the crater's interior took samples of various types
