A message which is received at Internet Service Provider (ISP) or receiving email server is an e-mail which is directly received at the intended recipient. In other words, direct email is the one in which the intended recipient is known and an email is directly sent to the intended recipient. However, it is possible that the direct email, although the email is supposed to be sent to the intended recipient, gets bounced back by the receiving server or the mail is forwarded from some other intermediate email server to the recipient. Why does this happen? For this, there is a reason for this. Bulk Mail Service companies like Yahoo or Hotmail, for example, are selling their service to small businesses. These bulk mail companies work on a flat rate basis. As they have to cover their costs, the flat rate is set at a high level. This means that when they receive emails, they have to scan all the emails and check whether they are relevant to the recipients or not. If the email is deemed to be relevant to the recipient, the email will be stored. The customer service representative who checks the mail would then read the entire mail and forward only the emails deemed to be relevant to the recipient. That is why there is a possibility of you receiving emails which you are not supposed to receive. This can be a daunting task for a small business. Bulk Mail Service providers charge their customers on a flat rate. This means that if they store a thousand emails, they will charge the same rate regardless of whether they forward the emails or not. It does not matter if the emails are relevant or not. This means that if they forward the emails, they will incur a huge cost. This is the reason why bulk mail service providers charge you. However, when you use an e-mail sender like Mail SenderExpress, your e-mail will be sent directly to the recipients. This means that the recipients will receive only your relevant e-mails. You will only incur the cost of sending the email once. But, this means that the email will only be stored once. If it is deemed to be relevant to the recipients, the recipients will receive that email directly. This saves you from incurring any unnecessary cost. How can you choose a reliable e-mail sender for small businesses? So, in order to choose an e-mail sender, it is important to choose a reliable sender. But you will have to be careful while choosing such email sender as these days, most bulk email service providers offer flat rate charging. If you do not wish to be charged a flat rate, you can opt for bulk email service providers such as Yahoo! Mail, AOL Mail and Google Mail. They are very reliable and if you subscribe to their paid services, they will directly forward your e-mails to your recipients. But this means that you will be paying a monthly fee. You can opt for e-
