It was developed as a free, donationware project by Jayce Frye, of Shroud of the Avatar's lead game designer, and released as open source under the GPLv3 license. It has a modular design, and supports a large number of features, and like all 2D games, exploits the smaller gaming monitors of computers which do not have a 3D monitor. The primary reason for adding support for 2D to the game was to make it easier for children to play the game, many of whom lack the required eye-hand coordination to play in 3D. Features Features of the 2D modification include: New interface New skill bar Spell icon casts New base class New item icon "Flag of Repentance" (2nd class) Aion-like features such as helm, rings, and gauntlets The base class is the Raven, and the only other character class is the Blade. Impact There have been few other similar enhancements for game engines, and primarily because 3D games have a larger install base than 2D games. The case took a surprising twist in May, when the founders of the infamous BitTorrent site were acquitted of charges by a Danish court. In response, the founders are back in front of the German 3da54e8ca3
